

Deaths Reported by the "Long Islander" 1891-1900

Abstracted by David Roberts

Introduction and Purpose:

This is the second volume of abstracts of deaths reported by the Long Islander, a newspaper published at Huntington, Suffolk County, L. I., New York. Material for the period 1878-1890 can be found in Deaths Reported by the 'Long Islander' 1878-1890 by David Roberts, Heritage Books [1998]. Local newspapers are an excellent source of genealogical information, but much of this data is "buried" in the newspaper. It is often difficult for the genealogist to find the data needed. This list of abstractions should help solve this difficulty.

Abstraction Policies:

All deaths listed in the Died column have been included, as have all obituary notices. Many more deaths, however, are to be found in the local news columns from various Long Island communities. These deaths have been included and form a major part of the listings in this work. The newspaper often picked up the deaths of locally important figures from Brooklyn, New York City, or other areas of Long Island. These deaths have been included. Deaths of national or international figures were often reported by the newspaper. They, too, are included in these abstracts.

Accounts of contested wills, fires, railroad and steamboat accident, murder trials, large bequest of community institutions, explosions, drownings, natural disasters, legal notices, and the like all provided names of deceased persons.

Unlike the 1878-1890 volume, this volume does include information on the deaths of persons who could not be identified by name. These deaths were listed at the beginning of the work.

Policy on Names:

A reasonable effort was made to identify a person by his full name. This was not always possible. A person might only be listed as a relative of another person; a man just as Mr. or a woman just as Miss or Mrs. Married women were often listed, not by their name, but as Mrs. Husband's Name. Small children and infants were often not listed by name either. They would only be listed as the child of a particular parent.

No effort has been made to standardize surnames. Please check for alternate spellings for non-English surnames.

Policy on Dates:

Generally, the date of death could be found in the newspaper. Often, however, the death date was Monday of last week or On Wednesday or Recently or Last Week. Where possible, a date was estimated from the Perpetual Calendar to be found in the World Almanac. Where it was not possible to estimate a date, the date of the newspaper was given.

African Americans and Native Americans:

Persons noted in the newspaper as colored or black or mulatto are marked with a * for more easy identification. Sometimes, the paper didn't identify a person as colored, but some internal evidence, such as the funeral at the A. M. E. church, would show the person was probably an African American. These people were marked as *? Native Americans are identified, if the newspaper so identified them. Individuals with mixed Native American ancestry may have been called colored by the paper. Most people without a * or a *? are probably white, but there may be exceptions to this generalization.

Condition of the Microfilm:

Generally, the microfilm for the years 1891 to 1900 was good. However, some pages were too dark, or too faded, or too out of focus to be read clearly. A worse problem was the torn condition of the actual newspaper being microfilmed. Important information was often lost due to the rips, folds, and tears on the original copies. Loose pages without clear dates are another serious problem. Every effort was made to identify the date of the loose pages, but this was not always possible to do.

Added and Quoted Material:

If material was added to the citation by the abstractor, the added material has been enclosed with a []. Often this was necessary when quoting from the local news columns. The term this village needed to be identified as to which local news column was being quoted. If phrases were quoted directly from the newspaper, they are enclosed in quote marks.

Errors:

Every effort was made to keep errors to a minimum, but in a work of this size, there are bound to be mistakes. The small type used in the Died column certainly can lead to errors in reading initials and figures. Factual errors made by the newspaper are impossible to correct and are left as stated in the paper.

All secondary genealogical resources need to be checked against an original source. This work is no exception.

York in 1876 by President Grant; left Suffolk County to reside in New York City “and for many years after was a power in the city”; became political ally of future President Chester A. Arthur; appointed to New York City Police Board in 1879 and elected its president in 1880, serving until 1889; later in life in business partnership with son, Lester C. French, in West India Trading Company, as a broker selling “cordials, bitters and extracts”; summer resident of Sag Harbor; very long obit in 8 February 1896 paper; negative editorial in 8 February 1896 about his career; “Mr. French’s methods were not what are call legitimate ones, and his success and that of the gangs, both Republican and Democratic, which during his palmy days ruled the city and state of New York, were not healthful political conditions. The success of such men as Mr. French and his methods marks a low standard of political honesty and purity his whole political career was the embodiment of the spoils system”; editorial compares Mr. French to a “parasite that flourishes best on the decaying trunk of the tree” and states that Mr. French’s political power in Republican politics in Suffolk County caused Republican defeats and helped the Democratic party win important elections in Suffolk County; Editor’s Note: This is the most negative attack on a deceased person by the paper since its 1889 editorial attack following the death of Confederate President Jefferson Davis.

lynched in Georgia for killing a white man and “outraging the wife of the dead man”; his ears and fingers were cut off; his heart and liver cut out and carried off by the mob; kerosene poured over his body, which was set afire; “one special and two regular trains bearing 4000 people went out [from Atlanta] to the scene of the affair ... the mutilation of Hose was below the grade of crimes and warfare of the Apache or Sioux Indians in their most savage days. It shows a spirit of brutal savagery, a spirit of cruelty that has broken through the veneer of civilization and shows that in the hearts of the Southern whites there is at all times a demonical spirit that would outdo in deeds of cruelty even the Malay or negro in his African wilds. The fact that four thousand residents of the city of Atlanta would go to see such an affair, that a railroad company would run special trains to carry people to see such a revolting spectacle ... are striking commentaries on the state of law and order in the South”; editorial 20 April 1899 paper; Rev. Dr. Boughton, Baptist preacher in Atlanta, Georgia, protested the lynching, and his church was attacked by vandals; “the doors of one of the finest Baptist churches of the South were torn from their hinges and destroyed. Paint was poured over the carpets and floors and furniture destroyed. The assault on Dr. Boughton’s church is but a logical result of lax administration of the law and the criminal indifference of governors, courts and sheriffs to the committing of such gross crimes as murdering respectable and inoffensive colored men for alledged crime when there was not a particle of evidence to connect the prisoner with them”; editorial 6 May 1899 paper
