York in 1876 by President Grant; left Suffolk County to reside in New York City “and for many years after was a power in the city”; became political ally of future President Chester A. Arthur; appointed to New York City Police Board in 1879 and elected its president in 1880, serving until 1889; later in life in business partnership with son, Lester C. French, in West India Trading Company, as a broker selling “cordials, bitters and extracts”; summer resident of Sag Harbor; very long obit in 8 February 1896 paper; negative editorial in 8 February 1896 about his career; “Mr. French’s methods were not what are call legitimate ones, and his success and that of the gangs, both Republican and Democratic, which during his palmy days ruled the city and state of New York, were not healthful political conditions. The success of such men as Mr. French and his methods marks a low standard of political honesty and purity his whole political career was the embodiment of the spoils system”; editorial compares Mr. French to a “parasite that flourishes best on the decaying trunk of the tree” and states that Mr. French’s political power in Republican politics in Suffolk County caused Republican defeats and helped the Democratic party win important elections in Suffolk County; Editor’s Note: This is the most negative attack on a deceased person by the paper since its 1889 editorial attack following the death of Confederate President Jefferson Davis.
