

Edmond Conklin Estate

Transcribed by Honor Conklin,

Draft, November 26, 2013

For generations the descendants of the Pre-1700 Westchester Conklins and Conklin researchers have tried to recover the names of the parents of the first documented generation of now to be known nine siblings, Nicholas, John, Edmond, Deliverance, Joseph, Samuel, Katherine, Mary and Sarah Conklin. The descendants of Deliverance Conklin were especially active researchers and the surviving correspondence between the twentieth century researchers made clear the names of the parents had not been passed down. Published works of nineteenth and twentieth century Conklin family researchers, most notably Griffin, Mackenzie, Adams and Mann worked on the premise that the names were probably John and Helena Conklin, based on the naming patterns of their grandchildren. Walter Kenneth Griffin published the theory in his, "The Dutcher Family," New York Genealogical and Biographical Society Record 41, no. 1 (January 1910): 50-52. The documents of Edmond Conklins estate reveal for the first time, in many generations, that their names were John and Elenor Conklin and that there was a ninth child, Sarah Conklin.

The omission of Tobias Conklin in the estate documents appear to refute Conklin Mann's theory that the unplaced Tobias Conklin who married Dinah (DeVeaux) Guion and resided in Eastchester, might have been the son of Edmond Conklin. Dinah (DeVeaux) Guion was the daughter of Frederick DeVeaux and the widow of Lewis Guion by whom she had children. Tobias Conklin may have been somehow descended from Nicholas Conklin who resided in Eastchester, New York before eventually removing to Kakiat. Nicholas Conklin's grandson, Nicholas, removed from the Kakiat area to Eastchester, New York as an adult. Tobias and Dinah Conklin resided on land originally owned by William Haiden, not far from where the first Nicholas had resided. Both Nicholas Conklin, the grandson, and Tobias Conklin were affiliated with St. Paul's Church.

Abstracts of the papers of Edmond Conklin's estate were published in the 1980s and 1990s but the importance of them were not discovered until Nessie (Conklin) Ellish found and posted the citations to Conklin-L, a Rootsweb surname list, on October 8, 2013. This was followed by Tom Conklin finding an abstract of Edmond Conklin's will and posting it on October 10, 2013. The citation for the will is Nellie M. C. Beaman, "Abstracts Portsmouth Wills," Rhode Island Genealogical Register 5, no. 1 (July 1982): 35. The abstracts of the other papers were published by Jane Fletcher Fiske, "The Portsmouth Scrap Book," Rhode Island Roots 9, no. 2 (June 1983): 36; 9, no. 3 (September 1983):60 and by Jane Fletcher Fiske, transcribed by Sybil Crawford, "Portsmouth 'Loose Papers,'" Rhode Island Roots 22, no. [?] (September 1996): 78-79. The pasting of documents in a large record book, known as scrapbooks, was an early Rhode Island method of keeping records. That and the accompanying loose papers were discovered in the Portsmouth town hall by Clarence S. Brigham about 1903, as given in the Fiske articles. The documents now reside in the Portsmouth (R.I.) Town Clerk's office.

Brigantine Greyhound

At the time of his death on June 28, 1701, Edmond Conklin owned a quarter share of the captured brigantine Greyhound. The estate papers do not reveal the owners of the other three fourth shares of the brigantine. They may have been the same three men, Edward Woodman, Isaac Rolfe (Ruff), Thomas Wiles (Wells), who purchased the captured sloop Prophet Daniel from Abraham Samuel on Madagascar on October 31, 1699. Edmond Conklin left his quarter share of the brigantine of 100 tons, to brothers Joseph and William Wanton, shipwrights, of Tiverton and Portsmouth, Rhode Island.

In 1702 Queen Anne declared war on France and Spain (War of the Spanish Succession) and the brigantine was enlisted for duty and installed with twelve guns. Rhode Island Governor Cranston commissioned William Wanton as a privateer in June of 1702 with a crew of one hundred men and boys. The destination was Newfoundland in the Gulf of St. Lawrence where Wanton captured three French ships. Governor Joseph Dudley of Massachusetts, protested the condemnation of the ships, a process toward making them legitimate prizes, because he had not been the one to commission Wanton. Dudley charged that the Greyhound had "the face of a pirate." Ultimately the French ships were condemned.
